ready before pouring either the Cola or Cherryade or Limeade into a glass

Your favourite seemed to fit your personality, mine was Limeade, my brother's was Orangeade and my mum's was Lemonade, no one liked the Dandelion & Burdock, it always sounded as if it should live in the garden and not in the kitchen.

The Corona man always used to collect the bottles and we would get the money for the return, so it was in our interest to finish all the pop before

Remember when we were in Austria that summer, walk Pensione Jaeger? Far below the Ossiacher See, where long, green grayness, cupped on one end by the smattering of vacationers, that, from here, looked like toys, with the lake stretched on into endlessness, in its unknown-ness. One day we rented a boat and went out into the water, and Grossmutter was frozen into an awkward pose on the middle. Remember? I asked her what was wrong, and she said "swim."

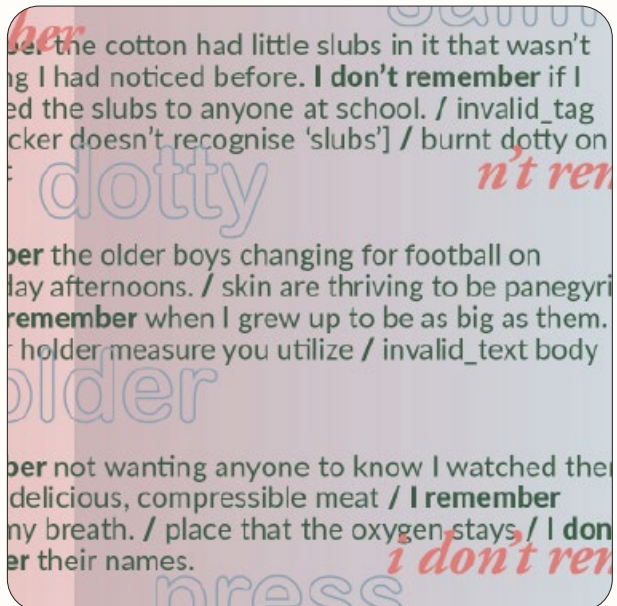

That summer it was just you and I with Grossmutter. During the day, you and I, to swim. Grossmutter stayed at the pen on the patio, and waited for us. At night we went to the disco with the boys - Dutch, German, Swiss, Austrian - all wore red jackets at them - their attempts to be fashionable were so unfortunate most nights, and flirted and smoked cigarettes.

Three years before, it was you and I and Ruthie here at Grossmutter. Jessie hadn't come with us since the time of Grossmutter when I was four years old. Three years before, upstairs to Abendessen, you three were already in the kitchen behind in our rooms, when, suddenly, I heard gasping, Inside the homes, Grossmutter's and our farmer neighbours' homes, everything was brown. Everything, it seemed, was made of brown wood. Dark wooden floors. Dark wooden walls. Dark wooden tables, and chairs, and cabinets. Inside the dark wooden hallways of our neighbours, where I was free to roam on my own, I wandered in and out of formal dining rooms, wash rooms, bedrooms - within which were dark wooden structures, like large cupboards with a large opening, and a goose feather mattress inside. I can still see Opa Biermann lying in his bed during a thunderstorm, looking like a confused and frightened four year old. Oma Biermann kindly explained to me that these days Opa was very frightened by the thunder.

In Dolldorf all of the adults were Tante or Oncele, Oma or Opa - aunt or uncle, grandma or grandpa. And they all gave you chocolate. Tante Meta (Biermann) was my favorite. Apart from Grossmutter (our grandmother) of course, she was my very favorite. Her beautiful reddish brown skin, with the permanent smile crinkles around her eyes, she was always smiling, and her bright blue eyes, and her brown braid that wound around her head like a crown.

A painting of a small blanket made by my mum before I was born, using scraps of dress and curtain fabric which held memories for her. I vividly remember this blanket from my childhood, and was always fascinated by the bold patterns and colours. A patchwork of layered memories from the 1970s.
